RELATIONSHIP OF LINGUISTICS WITH LINGUOCULTURAL STUDIES AND LINGUOPRAGMATICS

Hayitova Feruzabonu Olim qizi student
Uzbekistan State World Languages University
Teacher Mavlyanova M.D
Uzbekistan State World Languages University

Abstract. This thesis aims to delve into the intricate relationships that exist among linguistics, semantics, and pragmatics, which are fundamental branches of the broader field of language study. Linguistics, as the scientific study of language, encompasses various subfields such as phonetics, phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics, and pragmatics. Semantics focuses on the study of meaning in language at the level of words, sentences, and discourse, while pragmatics deals with how language is used in context to achieve communicative goals. This thesis seeks to elucidate how these disciplines intersect and influence each other, contributing to our understanding of human communication and language use.

Key words. Communication, evolution, linguistic, semantics, study, comprehension.

Introduction:

Language is a complex and dynamic system that plays a crucial role in human interaction and cognition. Linguistics, as the systematic study of language, aims to investigate the structure, function, and evolution of language in its various forms. Semantics, a subfield of linguistics, is concerned with the study of meaning in language, including how words and sentences convey information. Pragmatics, on the other hand, focuses on the study of how language is used in context to achieve specific communicative goals.

Literature Review:

Previous research has highlighted the interconnected nature of linguistics, semantics, and pragmatics, emphasizing the ways in which they interact and influence each other. Scholars have investigated how linguistic structures contribute to the expression of meaning (semantics) and how context influences interpretation and communication (pragmatics). Additionally, studies have explored how pragmatic knowledge guides language production and comprehension, shedding light on the dynamic nature of language use. [1]

Methodology:

This thesis will employ a comprehensive literature review approach to analyze existing research on the relationship between linguistics, semantics, and pragmatics. By synthesizing key findings from relevant studies, this thesis aims to provide a nuanced understanding of how these disciplines intersect and overlap, contributing to our knowledge of language structure and language use.

Results and Discussion:

The results of this study are expected to shed light on the intricate relationships that exist among linguistics, semantics, and pragmatics. By exploring how meaning is constructed and interpreted in different linguistic contexts, this thesis aims to elucidate the ways in which language structure, semantics, and pragmatics interact to facilitate communication and comprehension. Additionally, the discussion will highlight the implications of these findings for theoretical models of language processing and for practical applications in fields such as language teaching and natural language processing. [4]

Key concepts will be examined, such as compositionality of meaning, principles of the speech act, referential issues, as well as the influence of context on the interpretation of utterances.

Additionally, attention will be paid to studies that highlight the influence of cultural and social aspects on language use and the perception of meaning. This will help to better understand how different contexts and circumstances can influence communication patterns and interactions at the linguistic level.

The research will also identify practical applications of knowledge in the fields of semantics and pragmatics, both within linguistic research and in other disciplines such as psycholinguistics, computational linguistics, artificial intelligence and language teaching. [2]

This study seeks not only to consider the theoretical aspects of the relationship between linguistics, semantics and pragmatics, but also to identify their practical significance for understanding human communication and the development of language as a phenomenon actively used in various sociocultural situations.

In conclusion, this thesis will provide a comprehensive analysis of the relationship between linguistics, semantics, and pragmatics, highlighting their interconnectedness and mutual influences. By synthesizing existing research and presenting new insights into how these disciplines intersect, this study aims to advance our understanding of language structure, communication, and cognition. Ultimately, this thesis seeks to contribute to the broader field of language study by enriching our knowledge of how linguistic meaning is constructed, conveyed, and interpreted in diverse communicative contexts.

REFERENCES

1. Alshawi H. Memory and context for language interpretation. Cambridge, 1987. - 188 p.

2. Anderson J. R. Language, memory, and thought. - New York, 1976. - 291 p.

3. Bell R.T. Translation and Translating Theory and Practice. - London, New York. Longman, 1991. -298 p.

4. Tolibovna A. K. et al. Features Of Anthropocentric Study Of Sacred Texts. 2020. 5-10p.

5. Mamudov N. Looking for ways to perfect the taste of the language. Uzbek language and literature. Tashkent, 2012.

6. Maslova V.V. Lingvokulturologiya v sistema humanitariannogo znaniya Critika i semiotica. 2004.

7. Maslova V.A. Lingvokulturology: Uchebnoe posobie. Academia, 2001. - 208 p.